

BOOT HILL DISTILLERY

In the spring of 1872 George M. Hoover loaded his wagon with whiskey barrels. He tied a bandanna to his wagon wheel and counted out exactly five miles west from the edge of Fort Dodge, Kansas, where the sale of liquor would be legal.

Hoover erected a tent bar, with only two sod pillars holding up a plank of wood for a bar, and began selling to the soldiers and travelers passing through. From there Dodge City became western Kansas' largest trading post, leaving an indelible mark on American history, as well as pop culture.

DODGE CITY FRONT STREET, 1880

Boot Hill Distillery's story began in 2014 when western Kansas farmers Roger and Hayes Kelman and Chris Holovach decided to invest in western Kansas' first-ever craft distillery.

HARD RED WINTER WHEAT, GROWN BY KELMAN FARMS (OWNERS)

Boot Hill Distillery is owned by three western Kansas farmers. These multi-generation farms produce every single grain that Boot Hill Distillery uses to craft our world-class spirits. Our spirits are truly "soil to sip."

We grow, mill, mash, ferment, distill, and bottle 100% of our products, so from the moment the seed goes into the soil to the moment you pour our spirits into your glass, we've had full control.

Combining our years of farming expertise with an obsessive eye for quality distillation, we ensure that every single bottle that you purchase from Boot Hill Distillery is among the highest-quality products available in the world.

Dodge City's legacy was built on the ashes of the campfire and the footprints of a bar, and we're proud to be continuing that legacy here at Boot Hill Distillery.
